"Butterfly Sonata Syren" was painted during the summer of the COVID 19 pandemic. As the pandemic raged on, as the economic fallout collapsed businesses and lives, it was a sweetness to watch a few butterflies visit my balcony in the middle of summer. It was a joyful moment, pure delight, to see them -- as they are somewhat rare in this area. It was a touch of heaven, like rainbow clouds that come in the monsoonal summers, or the brilliantly white clouds that grace the skies in the springtime. It was a symbol of hope, and relief from months of dismal news and anxiety. The butterflies have a syren shadow that peers dimly out at us, as we face long range challenges to save our environment from overwhelming pollution.
