Fifteen, five times three, fifteen times one, fifteen times teen. A split time in life, not a child, not an adult, not anything but teen with too many questions about all of it. Peek outside and see nothing too much different with fifteen ager eyes, it looks the same but sounds different as my mind grabbed a hold of musically gifted artists that spun me around in fifteen different directions about life, wars, positions, placements, ideas that I never posited as a ten year old, not caring about much except finishing my studies, passing my exams, and playing outside hopscotch with friends and watching TV when allowed. Not much entered into my sheltered life of a ten year old person not expecting to be fifteen and fill up with too many questions about all of it. Trying to change some part of it, make my hair part on the side, cut it short, wear a different kind of blouse, without knowing if that was part of the answer to all the questions that crowd my fifteen ager old mind with noise about where when how who what why it will all evolve into some kind of order. It must arrive, some kind of order that imparts the knowledge to know where what how who why, with some ideas straight to the point. Nothing is vague, just mysterious, a fine point to banter over dinner with friends at one day in the future, how it will unfurl like a flag on a holiday, with all the strips and stars in the right order and the right color and have a place, a purpose, a path, a use, clearly defined. Where to make the border, how to divine the future, what will be cannot be seen, or determined, so I put on another record on the record player and dream that it might be this way or it might be another way, split in half with ideas that cannot be the same as I had when I was ten, or maybe they stayed the same. It was music that evolved my fifteen-ager mind into shapes and curves flexing ideas that bumped up and out of my mind, or sometimes my mouth, until I picked up some paints and made that part of me shine.
