

MARI HALL © 2020

"Px5 Syren Calculating" was painted during the summer of the COVID 19 pandemic. As the months moved forward into summer, I like many others, relied heavily on deliveries to my residence. I was not going out unless I absolutely had to do so. The stores were overrun with orders. There were shortages everywhere. We braced ourselves for what might be another kind of disaster. We relied in a different way, on our friendly little devices, our computers, our phones, to handle a load of connectivity that was not an essential part of our daily lives previously. Every box shipped to my door was my lifeline, as I no longer own a car. I waited anxiously for the email receipts and the friendly knock at the door. Many thanks for the essential workers who kept all of us more safe during the pandemic crisis, with a gentle nod of the head to our friendly electronic calculating devices that keep us all connected.
