"Social Distancing" was painted during the spring of the COVID 19 pandemic. All of a sudden, we had new rules to adhere to, as we tried to understand what to do with a "novel virus" infection problem. Social distancing, when explained as a chart or with numbers, is not the same as having to engage, interact with others while avoiding so many social mannerisms that are almost reflex, like hugging, or shaking hands or standing close to whisper something funny to a friend. The long side of social distancing was isolation, something that weighs heavily from time to time as we cannot gather and celebrate freely as we could before.
